

Global Mind Change

(an edited transcript from the Global Mind Change meme)

There's no way in the world that we can have national security unless everybody else in the world has national security as well. Because we're not going to forget how to make nuclear weapons even if we do decide to dismantle the ones we have. And so then you have to think about national and global security.

And then you realize that nobody feels secure when they don't know where their meal is coming from tomorrow. So you can't separate security from the problems of poverty and hunger. And you certainly can't separate security from the problem of environmental deterioration and impacting the life support systems of the planet. And that necessitates a total other change in attitude with regard to our relationship to the planet.

So all of these things are interconnected in such a way that there's no solution to one problem, national security or any other, there's no solution to one problem without a solution to them all together. And at first glance that might seem to make the problems much harder and the situation much more complex.

On the contrary it really doesn't because what is says is what we need one fundamental global mind change and all of the problems become much more solvable than they were before. And I think that's what we are some how being intuitively led to.